Rabbi's Corner

One People, Two Lands By Rabbi David Kosak

am thrilled that our focus in this issue of the Chronicle is on Israel as she turns seventy. It highlights the many ways that Israel is alive and well at Neveh Shalom. You may be surprised at how Neveh Shalom is alive and well in Israel also – reading about some of our families who made aliyah provides just such a window.

Yet to speak about Israel at all is becoming treacherous ground in our increasingly diverse Jewish community. Not so many years ago, almost all American Jews felt pride in Israel. It was a strong component of American Jewish identity. She was our little miracle, the one that held off countless hostile Arab armies, who made the desert bloom and created the Silicon Wadi with the greatest number of start-up companies per capita of any country in the world.

Today our relationship with Israel is increasingly broken, bruised, or irrelevant. There are many reasons for this change in attitude. On Kol Nidre, I offered a historical explanation.

In those comments, I noted that for almost all of Jewish history, we lived outside of our ancestral homeland. What united us was our longing to return, as well as overt and vicious anti-Semitism. But starting after World War II, in both America and Israel, we were confronted with a challenge for which our long history had never prepared us. What happens once we actually arrive? Once we are finally "at home."

In an ironic twist of history, that same post-war period found both American and Israeli Jews at home and secure in ways that our ancestors could never have imagined. The two most successful Jewish communities of all time just happened to arise at the same moment.

While this is an overall good, and while the problems of being settled and at home face both communities, the conditions of our life and the forms of power that we wield are very different. In America, our commitment to democratic, inclusive, and egalitarian values comes easy to us, because they are the same values that have granted us access to power and career success here. In Israel, however, those same values sometimes conflict with selfdetermination because large segments of the Palestinian population form a very real fifth column.

These different conditions have created an understanding gap where in some ways the problems of each community are invisible to the other. There is a sense of disappointment and even of moral superiority that each side exhibits which adds to the daylight between American and Israeli Jews. On a parallel track, it seems that this gap in comprehension leads to a sense of emotional rejection.

As an example of this, it is painful when the forms of Judaism we practice, hold dear, and believe to be authentic expressions of our tradition are spurned by the Israeli government. This rebuff cuts deep at who we are; it can feel like a core component of who we are is being treated with contempt. We should not deny or belittle this issue.

Nonetheless, and speaking personally, my love for Israel is not wholly contingent on the actions of its government, any more than I judge the totality of America based on whichever administration is charged with steering a national path at a given moment. So much of what is greatest about America is not found by viewing what occurs from a top-down hierarchical lens, or by focusing only on "newsworthy" happenings. Rather, innovation in arts, religion, culture, music, sports, and industry are the gifts of labor performed by individuals and groups.

That is equally true of Israel. Listening to how the Israeli jazz idiom is influenced by Middle-Eastern quarter tones and all the less common time signatures gathered from our long diaspora brings me pleasure. There's the cool, smooth sound of Anat Fort and the high intensity vibe of Omer Avital. Israeli musicians offer some of the most exciting sounds happening in the global jazz world.

Israeli rap, on the other hand, surprises me by how an American genre of music,

20 Years Later

By Rabbi Eve Posen

t was February of 1998 when a brighteyed 15-year-old got off the plane in Israel for the first time. I'm not sure what compelled me to announce to my parents that I was going to take a semester of high school to live in Israel, but whatever it was, it worked and there I was. Never having been before, it was a strange sensation arriving in another country that felt equally foreign and familiar. That magical moment when I walked off the plane I felt simultaneously at home and nostalgic, yet sad and fearful to be away from my family for a period of time. For four months I travelled the land, crisscrossing north to south, east to west, and fell in love with everything: the beautiful scenery as it passed outside the window of the tour bus, the food, and even my fellow travelers (we were teenagers after all).

There had never been much talk of Israel in my house growing up, although my paternal grandparents were Zionists. They intended to make aliyah in 1948, but their group of would-be émigrés fell apart and they never made it. As wonderful a dream as that was, l'm also thankful that occasionally plans change; if they had made it, my parents likely would have never met. All of this is to say that my interest in going to Israel was just as much about my teenage angst as it was about the land discussed in Hebrew school and in a few stories from friends and family.

What made that semester even more memorable was that I was in Jerusalem for the 50th birthday of Israel. The atmosphere in my group of teenagers was jovial and silly. We sprayed each other with shaving cream, pounded plastic blowup hammers, and sang and danced in the street with unbridled joy. The tumultuous politics of the Middle East could not have been further from my mind in that moment. My family was there visiting me, and I remember my father's smile, marking his first time back in that beautiful land since his own days of discovery 20 years earlier. It was easy, beautiful, and memorable.

To the 15-year-old Eve, Israel wasn't a political entity; it was a piece of my heritage, a part of my story. Now it's 2017, and we're on the brink of Israel's 70th birthday. She and I are both 20 years older. With age comes stress and complication, and often it is we, the Jewish community outside of Israel, who are complicated. There's the left, the right, the center, and plenty more opinions to fill in the gaps. As we move toward this milestone celebration, I admit I lust after the Israel of my youth. May we continue to work toward the day when the gorgeous, magical, and always complex land in our hearts and the land in reality are one and the same.

which has often been infected by misogyny here, has been repurposed as a form of political protest music that shares more with Dylan than Ice Cube. It's also not uncommon to find spiritual themes in Israeli hip-hop.

In other words, I believe that one way to restore the pride and love earlier generations had for Israel is by discovering her remarkable current vitality. It's a dynamism found in practically all areas of her society.

That doesn't mean we relinquish legitimate critiques we may have. It simply means that it's time we all develop a mature relationship with our ancestral homeland – one that's based on a well-rounded appreciation of all that Israel is, and of who we are. The two greatest Jewish communities of all time can offer each other remarkable treasures.

As Israel turns seventy, it's a perfect time for such a renewal.

B'ahavah, Rav D

hen I was 18, I volunteered on Kibbutz Alumim. about half an hour south of Ashkelon. One time, a representative of the kibbutz instructed me and other volunteers to clean out a clubhouse. We were incensed. We hadn't made the mess and, in fact, had never even stepped foot in this clubhouse. Apparently, the mess had been made by a group of teenagers who had visited the kibbutz prior to our arrival.

A 16- or 17-year-old girl from the kibbutz named Yael overheard us complaining to each other and chimed in: "What's the big deal? Each one of you just grab a mop and get to work. You'll be done in no time and you'll have a good time."

I was speechless. Here we were – from North America and the UK – and our mentality was entirely different. Our society had taught us: "the people responsible for the mess should be held to account, not us." But Yael's approach was not to focus on who caused the problem but rather that it needs to be fixed.

This is when I began to understand what the Talmud means when it teaches us that kol Yisrael arevim zeh bazeh – all of Israel are responsible for one another. Once that is understood, the question shifts from finger-pointing to other questions: how do we work together NOW in order to improve, in order to forge ahead, in order to fix a problem that we may not have caused?

Whether it is in relation to Israel or to our own communities in the US, in Canada, and elsewhere, we have an obligation to be responsible for each other. The High Holy Days, which just passed, asked us to look inward as a community, recognize our flaws, and improve. Understanding that we are responsible for each other makes the process less complicated. It really is about grabbing a mop and working together. And who knows? We may end up having a good time doing it!

An Overview

By Stephen Blake

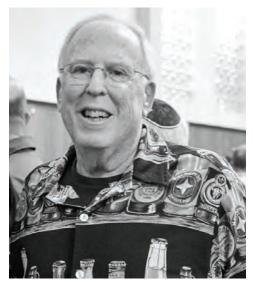

uring my tenure as president, I have often been asked about the deliberations of our Board of Directors and have been told many times that there is a lack of transparency between the Board and congregation members. For this reason, I have decided to use this column to provide an overview and update the community on issues the Board is currently dealing with.

First, I would like to remind you that the Board meetings, which generally take place on the third Thursday of each month, are open to any member who wishes to attend. With few exceptions, there is very little that the Board acts on that is not public information.

At the moment, there are a number of issues being considered. Some like financial status and membership are discussed at every meeting. Each month, our treasurer, Mark Kalenscher, gives a report on the current financial results and highlights areas that are doing better or worse than expected. This puts the Board on notice of any action that might be required to ensure the Congregation's financial security. Each month we also review any changes in membership, paying special attention to resignations as they can be warning signs of a potential problem.

In addition, reports are presented from various committees on current issues, project updates, new requests, etc. On a regular basis, we ask different committees or synagogue departments to make a detailed presentation outlining all of their responsibilities and projects. November. Membership In the Committee will be presenting.

The Board has been discussing CNS 150, the celebration of our 150th anniversary in 2019. As you have already heard, this will consist of two phases: One, a year-long celebration. Two, a capital campaign aimed at securing our financial future by retiring existing debt and building an endowment to help offset future operating expenses.

For our September meeting, topics of discussion included a review of High Holy Day services, the current status of our schools, and Fall programming. We also talked about the potential acquisition of a property adjacent to Ahavai Shalom cemetery.

I hope you find this information interesting and useful. We will try to keep you informed on a regular basis.

If Not Now, When? Carpe Diem!

n this issue of The Chronicle, we are exploring how connected American Jews are to the land of Israel. Does this reflection spark your interest? Perhaps it is time for you to go for a long overdue visit? If so, why not join Rabbi Isaak and his wife Carol on a trip of a lifetime and make 5778 the year that you keep that promise to yourself to personally experience Israel.

This two-week trip will take place from June 13 to June 27. Possible activities include exploring the new excavations in the City of David, climbing or going on the cable car to the top of Masada, spending time at Yad Vashem, swimming in the Dead Sea, shopping in the revitalized Jewish Quarter of Jerusalem, and participating in an archeological dig, among other things.

The trip is open to people of all ages in addition to friends outside of Neveh Shalom or Portland. If you are interested, please contact Rabbi Isaak directly, as soon as possible, disaak@ nevehshalom.org.

Mason is a 7th-grade student at Hazelbrook Middle School, where he plays drums and enjoys math and science. He is active in Boy Scouts, and in his free time he enjoys video games, Star Wars, hiking and camping. For his B'nai Mitzvah project he volunteered at the Audubon Society taking care of the education birds and the hospitalized animals.

Maya Malka - November 18

Maya Malka is daughter of Ronnie and David Malka, older sister to Ellie, and granddaughter of Judy and Yossi Malka (Portland) and Miri and Steve Oren (Los Angeles). Maya is an outstanding student at Robert Gray Middle School. She loves to hang out with her friends, dance, play basketball, and play softball. Maya has also had a strong connection to her Israeli roots from a young age. She loves her frequent summer trips to Israel, where she visits her extended family and friends. Maya took her love for Israel and her strength in philanthropy and raised $1800 to donate to KKL. While in Israel, she and family members planted 100 trees ($18/each) to fight desertification. It is a true pleasure to watch Maya grow into the amazing person she is becoming.

Noam is the son of Chantal and Eli Rosenthal, brother to Emma and Isaac, grandson to Shoshana and Harris z"l Rosenthal (Boston, MA), and Christiane Julhes and the late Norman Smith (Portland). Noam is a 7th-grader at Portland Jewish Academy and an extreme Camp Solomon Schechter camper. He is a Boston sports fanatic, and has some bold predictions for this year's football and basketball season! He loves to travel, play sports, tape, and hang out with friends and family. This weekend was selected for Noam's Bar Mitzvah because it would have been his grandfather Harris's 100th birthday. Unfortunately, he passed away two years ago, but he is here in spirit.

Jack Reynolds – December 16

Jack Reynolds is the son of Deborah Choyne Reynolds and Jason Reynolds, and older brother to Nate. He is the grandson of Leslie and Irwin Choyne (New York) and the late JoAnn and William Reynolds (California) (z"l). Jack is a 7th-grader at Portland Jewish Academy, where his favorite subjects are math and drama. Outside of school, Jack enjoys rowing crew and playing basketball with friends. Jack is a sweet and sensitive young man who is always willing to help out at home and in the community.

srael Education is Jewish Education

By Mel Berwin, Director of Congregational Learning

ow do we teach Israel to children when Israel itself is such a divisive force among our own community? This was one of the questions dozens of Jewish educators from around the Pacific Northwest raised in July at a conference on Teaching Israel, hosted by Camp Solomon Schechter and featuring diverse speakers from Shalom Orzach (iCenter) to Rabbi Dana Benson (UW Hillel).

Shalom Orzach began the conference with the statement "Israel education IS Jewish education, and Jewish education IS Israel education. There is no way to separate them." Although at first I thought I could poke holes in that argument, the more I sat with it, the more true it seemed. Before this conference, if you had asked me how we teach Israel in our ALIYAH program, I would have pointed to the aspects of our curriculum that are explicitly about Israel, primarily in 3rd grade (when we compare Jewish holiday traditions at home and in Israel) and 11th grade (when we focus on Israel/American relations). But as I reflected on the more holistic view of the essential integration of Israel and Jewish life, I realized: We do teach Israel in all that we do.

Our kids learn from Israeli teachers and American teachers who have lived in Israel, learn Modern Hebrew along with Siddur Hebrew, focus on the mitzvah of Ahavat Yisrael (loving the Jewish people, who are named Israel) in Kindergarten, the history of the land of Israel through Torah stories in 2nd grade, focus on Israeli tzedakah organizations we've partnered with in 6th grade, celebrate Israeli-style holidays each year at Lag Ba'Omer, pray for peace for Israel each day in tefilah, and on and on, right up through

Rabbi Kosak's Spiritual Life Skills with our 12th graders, focusing on civilized dialogue skills for talking about divisive politics, including Israel. Many of these curricular and staffing choices are entirely intentional (hiring Israeli teachers and teaching Modern Hebrew, for example)and yet they also seem intrinsically integrated with our program. If we tried to remove Israelits history and culture and language and people—from our school, we would literally have to reinvent everything, starting with our synagogue's siddurim. Jewish education is Israel education.

The name Yisrael was given to Jacob when he wrestled with God. As Dana Benson pointed out, in every relationship where there is love, there is also struggle. Israel is the name of the Jewish people as well as a land that claims our history, our love, our struggle, and our hope. It would be devastating (and wildly disproportioned) if we reduced our entire perspective of Israel to one or two decades out of the thousands of years of life and history and connection our people have in that place. When we keep a broad and holistic perspective, teaching about Israel seems much less controversialit's simply and intrinsically a part of who we are and what we do.

Debbi Villani-Allen

Retiring After 30 Years of Bringing Heart and Soul to Our Congregation

By Jennifer Greenberg

uring her workday break, Debbi Villani-Allen often puts on her sneakers and walks. When the weather is not conducive to being outside, she walks big laps through the building and the main sanctuary. When asked why she gravitates toward the sanctuary she says, "It is a sacred space. I like to be in that space and take the sacredness in. I walk past the memorial plaques; there are many names on there of people I have known. It brings back their memory, it is a chance to keep them in my thoughts and prayers. There have been lots of dear people [over the past 30 years]."

When Debbi first came to Neveh Shalom, she was a single mom looking for a job where she could balance her time and finish her bachelor's degree in pastoral ministry and counseling at Marylhurst. She comments, "I came here literally knowing nothing about Judaism, but I knew I could learn a lot and that

"Working closely with Rabbi Stampfer in my early days at CNS was so special to me. I did support work for him as the Senior Rabbi and also for his involvement and work with Camp Solomon Schechter, the Institute for Judaic Studies, the Oregon Jewish Museum (OJM), and the Society for Crypto Jews. It was so interesting. Rabbi Stampfer was an amazing man to work with and for - his ethics, morals, beliefs, strength, kindness and calmness under any kind of storm or pressure always impressed me. You could see that his teaching is in his soul, it radiates from there."

When Debbi started in 1988, Arnold Cogan was CNS President. When the comptroller position became open, Irv Potter was Board President and Alan

Rabbi Isaak has deemed her an "honorary Catholic Jew." Debbi remembers attending her first Jewish service. She remembers "hearing prayers in Hebrew and being so touched by that, it hit me at a very spiritual level. I never felt uncomfortable or out of place. "

Retirement for Debbi is bittersweet. "I am here because of the people I work with and the congregants I serve." She has brought her patience and warmth to every day of the job. "The bottom line is that the work is important, but the people are what makes it all come together," she says.

After retirement Debbi will spend time helping care for some of her other favorite people – her grandchildren. She is looking forward to travel, but even more so, after 30 years of being at Neveh Shalom at 9am, to spending time at home, relaxing with a cup of coffee in hand, reading a good book, or working on scrapbook projects.

Please join us at a party celebrating and wishing a farewell to Debbi on Thursday, November 16 at 6:30pm.

Israel360 Reaching Beyond the Ordinary to Obtain an Extraordinary All-Around View

by Debra Shein

ne hundred years ago, on November 2, 1917, the British government issued the Balfour Declaration announcing its intent to create a Jewish homeland in Palestine. At the time. American Jewish communities were divided on whether or not to support the Zionist cause, although under the leadership of Justice Louis D. Brandeis it was quickly gaining traction. The intervening century has seen the establishment of the Israeli state, and has witnessed the support of American Jews wax and then wane, not just because of debates concerning the Palestinian people and land acquired during the 1967 war, but because of mixed opinions concerning Israel's religious policies and other issues as well. Many tend to take "sides" in the debates dependent on political sympathies or affiliation. And yet, if we hope to better understand the situation and find solutions to the impasses of the present, we need to continually strive to expand our horizons and better understand others' points of view. programming about Israel that truly examines it from 360 degrees" and to do what "seems almost treacherous in America today," which is to "transcend the taboos" and openly discuss everything that divides us so sharply in the debates. current issues, have worked together to launch Israel360. As Rabbi Kosak related in a recent interview, the goal of this project is to provide "quality scheduled that focus on culture and the arts, as well as science, and are not limited to politics, "which is, of course, only one aspect of an amazing and dynamic country."

Rabbi Kosak believes that because "for most of Jewish history Israel has always been central to the Jewish imagination, it's impossible to be Jewish in any deep way without having some sort of grasp of Israel the ideal and Israel the real. And especially given the current nature of Israel-Diaspora relations, it's an extremely powerful way to understand who we are as American Jews and what motivates us." When asked why he personally was committed to the project of gaining a fuller understanding of Israel today, he noted that he has lived there for over three years in total, and spoke of some of the many positive ways it has impacted his life. He praised Israeli medicine and technology for giving him and his wife Laura their first son after five years of infertility and working with the best specialist in the U.S. to no avail. He also expressed an "eternal debt" to Israel for the care it provided to him after he was victimized by a terror attack at Hebrew University in 2002. Furthermore, he noted that the diversity of Jewish experience in Israel, including economic and cultural diversity as well as a variety of religious expression, has a lot to teach American Jews who often do not experience such a wide range of differences in their somewhat insular communities.

So far, Israel360 programming has included a fascinating and thoughtprovoking range of topics. One event featured a discussion with Loren Spielman, a faculty member in Judaic Studies at Portland State University, who spoke about the historical boundaries of Israel and the various border configurations considered in recent peace talks. In another, Elad Vazana, an Israeli educator who specializes in bringing together Palestinian and Israeli adults and youth, helped facilitate communication between those with varying views on Israel and its role in our lives. And in another, Israeli zoologist Dr. Uri Shanas focused on his cross-border study of the ecosystem of the Arava, shared by Jordan and Israel.

Israel360 is presently hosting a mini film series. The first film, The Settlers (which was shown Oct. 22), on jointly sponsored by CNS Men's Israel360, Club, CBI Brotherhood, Havurah Shalom, Kol Shalom and P'nai Or, provided a closeup view of life in West Bank "settlements." The second, The Best Place on Earth (Nov. 5), co-hosted by the Neveh Shalom

Book Club, is adapted from a collection of short stories of the same name by Ayelet Tsabari featuring Israel's Mizrachi Jews. The third, The Gatekeepers (date has been postponed), is a documentary telling the story of Israel's secret service, the Shin Bet, from the perspective of six of its former chiefs. Additional future events are in the works. Possibilities include an exhibit of work by contemporary Israeli artists, an investigation of the halachic basis of "Land for Peace," a study of Kupot Holim (Israeli health insurance organizations) as a model of healthcare, a look at the status of the Right of Return for both Israelis and Palestinians, and a visit by the Israeli Consul General in San Francisco.

Israel360 programming has included a fascinating and thought-provoking range of topics.

The Israel360 steering committee is currently seeking additional members who would like to help plan events. All viewpoints are welcome. If you are interested, please get in touch with Rabbi Kosak, dkosak@nevehshalom.org.

A aking Aliyah to Israel – the Journey of Three Neveh Shalom Families

By Jenn Director Knudsen

very year, thousands of American and Canadian Jews make aliyah to Israel. A number of Neveh Shalom's own are included in those statistics. Three CNS families who made aliyah in 2001, 2008, and 2012, share their reasons — similar and divergent — for making the Jewish homeland their own home, either temporarily or for the long haul.

The Zeff Family

Aliza Zeff, 41, was raised at Neveh Shalom. In 1999, Rabbi Stampfer and Rabbi Isaak — as well as cousin Joe Menashe and close friend Rabbi Robert Kahn — co-officiated her 1999 wedding to Todd Zeff.

Aliza, who is the daughter of George and Laurie Fendel, says, "At 18, I was the first person in my immediate family to visit Israel, and I fell in love immediately." But 12 years — and a career at a Philadelphia-based Jewish day school went by before Aliza and Todd decided to make aliyah. They moved to Israel on August 13, 2012.

Aliza — now mother to Maya, 13, Joey, 11, Asher, 7, and Benny, 1 — says when an opportunity to move to Israel presented itself, she and Todd "knew pretty much right away that it was a good fit for us." Still, she admits, "I had more reservations (than Todd)."

By contrast, Lisa Kama wanted to live in Israel from age 16, when she participated in a summertime Young Judaea program. Her parents, Manny and Karen Berman, insisted she earn a bachelor's in the U.S. first. "So," she recalls, "I had to wait six years while I finished high school and completed my bachelor's." In 2001, she at last could call Israel home.

Lisa, married to Alon Kama and mom of Geffen, 9, and Mattan, 6, ticks off many reasons Israel "fit." "I loved not being a minority," she says. "I loved that my holidays were the holidays celebrated by everyone around me. I loved that the whole country shut down on Friday afternoons for Shabbat and that people were more informal, wearing more casual clothing, inviting home strangers they met in a café, and dropping in on someone without scheduling days in advance."

Robert Kahn — Aliza Zeff's good friend — says making aliyah was a dream come true. (Coincidentally, Robert and his wife, Camille, made aliyah August 13, 2008, exactly four years before Aliza did.)

Still, he strikes a sanguine tone about Israel. "Falling in love is not exactly how it works, since Israel is not paradise," says the son of Judith and Garry Kahn and father of three children, Avinoam, Dalya, and Elle. "It's a difficult place to live," he continues. "Rather, making aliyah is a desire to do everything in our power to help the Jewish state, recognizing that we live in a unique historical time and shouldn't take anything for granted."

Robert says he and his family return to Portland and Seattle (Camille's home town) about once a year; he misses his native city and country. But, he says, he and his wife never considered returning full-time to the States. Rather, they hope to become grandparents in the Holy Land, and Robert's profession keeps him grounded there.

"As a guide and educator, I'm always in a position to share my passion and help people have a better appreciation of what's happening here in the last 69 years," Robert says in an email from home.

Lisa Kama, by contrast, did return to the States. In 2009, a job opportunity led the Kama family to settle in Pleasanton, California.

"When I made aliyah, my intention was to stay in Israel forever," Lisa says. "The decision to leave Israel was very difficult for me. I wanted to raise kids in Israel because I wanted them to grow up in a Jewish state. Not a day goes by that I don't think about what might have been."

Making a Move(ment): The Conservative Movement in the US and Israel

By Eadie Kaltenbacher

Jew is stranded on a desert island. When his rescuers arrive, they discover he has built two synagogues. "You are only one man...why do you have two synagogues?"

"This one here: this is the one where I would wrap tefillin, observe holidays, and pray for my rescue."

"And the other one?"

"That's the one I don't step foot in!"

This old joke speaks to a larger truth: many Jewish people feel very strongly about the movement with which they choose to affiliate. But what does being part of the Conservative movement really mean, and how is that different in the US and Israel? I spoke with Mel Berwin, Director of Congregational Learning, to gain a better understanding. Mel explained that in the US, the Conservative movement was formed as an offshoot of the Reform movement, which had shed many of the traditional practices of Orthodoxy. The Conservative movement strives to re-integrate more tradition, but with consideration for the greater American mosaic of which we are a part. The USCJ website emphasizes the phrase "authentic and dynamic" to capture the spirit of Conservatism.

This Conservative movement consists of almost 600 congregations in North America with a budget of more than $30 million. In contrast, Mel told me that the Israeli Masorti movement sprung out of the gap left between the two main categories: Orthodox and secular (Hiloni). Since Jewish culture permeates the Israeli lifestyle, it is easy to consider oneself "secular" yet still practice many Jewish observances and be a part of a Jewish community. Most non-Orthodox Jews consider themselves secular in Israel. The Masorti movement aims to reach a middle ground: a non-fundamentalist yet formal organization.

In Israel, the Masorti movement struggles with the stigma of being considered somehow less Jewish than Orthodoxy. The Masorti organization works to educate Israelis about their goals of a "pluralistic, egalitarian, inclusive approach to living a Jewish life in Israel." However, one-third of current Masorti members have a North American background, indicating that the movement has not been fully embraced by native-born Israelis.

התנועה המסורתית The Masorti Movement

One discrepancy of Israeli law is that religious institutes receive major funding from the State – but these funds are limited to Orthodox organizations. The Masorti movement receives minimal public funding, and has a budget of $2.5 million supporting about 70 kehillot (congregations).

What does being part of the Conservative movement really mean, and how is that different in the US and Israel?

> These and other features of Conservative Judaism were the subject of a recent class taught by Mel Berwin, Conservative Judaism Explained. She offers this class each fall.

> As a final thought, I'd like to offer these questions for your consideration: What is your view of Conservative Judaism? What is the meaning of the Conservative movement to you?

Mazel tov to Susannah Dickerson, daughter of JoAnn & Chris Bezodis, on being a recipient of the Brazelton Scholarship for International Studies. Susannah and her brother, Stephen Dickerson, departed on August 29 for Jerusalem, Israel and both are studying at the Rothberg International School at Hebrew University until June 2018. Their parents couldn't be more proud of both of them!

We are excited to share the news that Rachel and Jason Nelson welcomed new baby girl, Noa Leora Nelson, on September 20, 2017! Mom, Dad, Noa and proud grandparents Fred and Nora Rothstein, are all doing well and enjoying getting to know each other.

Mazel Tov to Martha Izenson on passing the Oregon State Bar.

Yihi Zichram Baruch – Our condolences to CNS members who have recently lost loved ones:

Our condolences to Leah Conley, Director of Foundation School, on the passing of her beloved grandmother, Reva Kerker, z"l.

Our condolences to Marlene Abrams on the passing of her dear sister-in-law, Gloria Abrams, z"l

Our condolences to Naomi Leavitt, whose beloved grandmother passed away at the age of 97 on Wednesday, September 27 in the Netherlands. She was the grandmother of Naomi (Scot) and the great-grandmother of Isabella & Abigail Leavitt. "Oma Chris" was a blessing.

We regret having to inform you of the passing of our dear congregant, Jack Lakefish (z"I), dear father of Baruch Bashan and Randall Lakefish. Jack passed away on Yom Kippur day.....also his 100th birthday.

Our condolences to Sheri Cordova on the passing of her beloved aunt, Elaine Stein Golden, z"I. Elaine and "Hi" (Hillard) were longtime members of Neveh Shalom before moving to Seattle.

Mazel Tov to CNS members who were involved in the Taste of Art and Celebration of Art happenings on October 28-29 at the MJCC: Sharon Segal, Jonathan Lietz, Jane Means, Eddy Shuldman, Esther Liberman, Glenn Decherd, Martha Decherd, Ros Kane, Julia Waco, and young adult-artists, Talia Valdez, Edith Crever, and Ethan Gilbert.

Mazel Tov to Adam and Megan Chusid on the birth of their first child, Charlotte Bea Chusid, born on August 26, 2017 in San Francisco. Charlotte is adored by her grandparents, Norman and Kathy Chusid and Nick and Meg Florio of New York.

Mazel Tov to congregant Steven Goldsmith on the opening of his new Oregon Kosher certified food cart, Holy Smokes Righteous Eats, on SW Beaverton Hillsdale Hwy.

Join Rabbi Stampfer for his 3rd Bar Mitzvah

On Shabbat Hanukah morning, December16, 2017, Rabbi Joshua Stampfer will celebrate his third Bar Mitzvah when he reaches the age of 96. (The three Bar Mitzvah's are at the ages of 13, 83 and now 96). He will chant the Haftorah and deliver a revised Bar Mitzvah speech. The congregation is invited to share in this festive occasion.

An Opportunity Awaits You ~ By Sarah Elianna Rohr

n Judaism, we have a blessing for everything – the food that we eat, the organs that digest our food, the earth from which that food is sourced.

We also have a ritual for everything. Anything can be sanctified:

- You broke up with your significant other?
- You just turned 70 and want a sacred space to celebrate?
- You had a miscarriage and need to be held in a healing manner?
- A family member passed away and you need a place to honor and connect to your grief?

All of these scenarios and every major threshold event you would like to consecrate with a ritual action have a place, not only within our synagogues or our homes, but also now, in Portland, at Rachel's Well Community Mikvah. The Mikvah has become a reality thanks to the tireless efforts of many – the Jewish Federation of Portland, the Oregon Board of Rabbis, Caron Blau Rothstein, Rabbi Tzvi Fischer, Sarah Evans, Naomi Malka and Ronnie Malka. The Federation owns and operates the Mikvah, and it is accepting tax-deductible donations which are still needed.

More about our Mikvah!

Rachel's Well is located next to the Mittleman Jewish Community Center off of SW Capitol Hwy, with its own parking lot and building entrance. The Mikvah has a simple yet elegant design, with special attention to the details that enhance user experience. For example, for those with mobility issues, a chairlift can be brought into the space.

When you come to experience the Mikvah, you will be escorted by a trained Mikvah guide. The guide will walk you through all of the protocols and will be by your side if you need a witness or accompaniment. Or, if you prefer to be left on your own, they will attend to the space surrounding your experience. There are suggested donations but no one will be turned away due to lack of funds. Various types of memberships are also available.

The Mikvah is our tradition's inclusive technology that allows you to literally get naked and connect with the echad v' echad. It's not an ordinary bathtub. All of the kavanah (intention) which created it, and all of the rituals and ceremonies that will fill it with that presence of awe and wonder, make it a haven for you to come to and rest in.

Rabbi Fischer (Orthodox affiliation), who is overseeing Rachel's Well, states, "No one identifying as Jewish can make this Mikvah unkosher." I translate that to mean that all who identify as Jewish are welcome in Rachel's Well Mikvah to be sanctified, uplifted, cradled, and nourished by the mayim chayim (the waters of life).

I was an attendee at the Mikvah guide training, and I heard it said that "All living bodies of water are kosher – oceans, rivers, lakes, streams – water is life and water is holy."

To reserve your space or for more information, please visit: www. jewishportland.org/ourcommunity/ rachels-well-portland-mikvah.
